Todaro Rewarded with Italy Selection for Autumn Internationals

Northampton Saints wing Edoardo Todaro has been rewarded with a well-deserved call-up to Italy’s national squad for the forthcoming Autumn Internationals Series, following his blistering early tempo in the Gallagher Premiership season. The teenager’s rapid ascent has drawn attention across both English and Italian rugby circles, marking him as one of Europe’s brightest rising prospects.

The 19-year-old flyer has notched three tries in the opening trio of league fixtures and captured the Player of the Match accolade during the East Midlands derby triumph over Leicester Tigers last Saturday. His ability to combine raw pace with sharp footwork and defensive alertness has made him an essential weapon for Northampton’s attack, and his stability has not gone unnoticed by Italy’s selectors.

Just a few months ago, Todaro was representing his country at the World Rugby Under-20 Championship, demonstrating maturity beyond his years while performing against some of the best age-grade players in the world. His inclusion in the senior squad offers him a realistic chance to earn his first full international cap when Italy face Australia, South Africa, and Chile in November’s hard schedule.

Another player promoted from the youth ranks is Enoch Opoku Gyamfi of Bath Rugby, who also competed for Italy’s U20 side earlier this year on home soil during June and July. The powerful 148-kilogram lock, who has impressed with his physical presence and set-piece reliability, joins Todaro as the second uncapped 19-year-old in head coach Gonzalo Quesada's squad.

Autumn Internationals 2025: Italy Coach Quesada Prepares Squad for November Tests

Both players symbolize the new wave of Italian talent being developed through the federation's youth systems. Completing the trio of newcomers is Zebre Parma center Damiano Mazza, aged 26, who earns his maiden senior call-up after steady form in the United Rugby Championship. Mazza's selection rounds out a 34-man squad that blends fresh talent with seasoned internationals such as Michele Lamaro, Tommaso Allan, and Ange Capuozzo.

We have a very exciting assignment ahead of us during the upcoming international window in November, said Quesada, who succeeded Kieran Crowley earlier this year. The objective of our Verona training camp is to optimize the limited time available so that we're fully prepared for Udine without excuses, but with great appetite and enthusiasm.

After the tour in Namibia and South Africa, the squad is eager to begin a new campaign together, especially with the chance to perform at home in front of our supporters. The Autumn Internationals 2025 will test Italy's depth and development, particularly as they continue to evolve under Quesada's leadership.

Since taking charge, the Argentine coach has emphasized discipline, fitness, and adaptability, seeking to build on the progress Italy demonstrated during the most recent Six Nations Championship. The first fixture of the Autumn Internationals Series, much like the Six Nations, is always the most challenging to prepare for, Quesada explained.

Italy Vs Australia: Quesada Backs Youth in Italy's Long-Term Vision

But I possess enormous confidence in this coaching unit and this group of athletes to invest the energy, vow, and precision required. We'll spend two full days working as a complete group in Verona before releasing players who compete abroad back to their clubs. Training will then intensify ahead of the Italy vs Australia clash, where Quesada expects his side to showcase their progress and grit on home soil.

Then we'll reconvene with the full squad for the week leading up to the encounter against Australia. I do not doubt that everyone will be ready. Quesada also highlighted the importance of maintaining a developmental pathway for Italy's emerging stars. We've assembled the group we believe gives us the best start in Verona, he continued.

Athletes such as Opoku-Gyamfi and Todaro now have the prospect, as has occurred previously with young rivals like Di Bartolomeo, Odiase, Mey, and Belloni, to experience this level of training, understand the national team’s mechanics, and clasp its culture. Their inclusion ahead of the Autumn Internationals highlights Italy’s commitment to developing young players capable of contributing at the highest level.

Whether they ultimately take the field will depend entirely on their performance and readiness. With Italy aiming to build momentum ahead of the next Six Nations, the inclusion of youthful players like Todaro reflects a broader strategy focused on long-term sustainability rather than short-term fixes. The Italian Rugby Federation views this campaign as a vital stage in nurturing homegrown talent capable of challenging Europe’s elite.
